Mycotoxin Production

Plants grown during drought conditions are more susceptible to mycotoxin production. Mycotoxins of concern include aflatoxin, DON, a.k.a. vomitoxin, zearalenone, and fumonisin. These toxins are produced by Aspergillus and Fusarium species. If mycotoxin levels are high enough in feed, side effects may be observed. These effects include reduced feed consumption, decreased milk production, and reproductive issues such as poor embryo survival.

USDA Action Levels for Mycotoxins in feed for dairy cows are as follows. Tolerated levels are typically slightly higher for beef cattle as milk contamination is not a concern.

	Action Level
Aflatoxin	20 parts per billion
Vomitoxin (DON)	2-5 parts per million
Fumonisin	10 parts per million

If you are concerned about mycotoxins affecting your herd, please discuss this with your veterinarian.
